

STUIFBERGEN BULB COMPANY IRIS & PAEONIA

FALL
2025

Bare root perennials
for fall planting

STUIFBERGEN
BULB COMPANY

We are excited to introduce our inaugural Paeonias & Iris fall planting program for 2025.

This second edition features over 100 Paeonia and Iris varieties available for delivery starting mid October 2025. To ensure timely delivery of roots in the fall, please submit your order by August 1st. Along with this catalog, you'll receive a copy of the order form. Additionally, we can provide a digital EZ order form for your convenience, making ordering even simpler.

You'll find useful information about plant tags, shipping, and our locations on the last page of this catalog. The total index of the available varieties is listed on the next page.

On behalf of Team Stuifbergen, we want to express our gratitude for your past orders. We hope to continue serving you in the upcoming season and extend a warm welcome to new customers interested in trying Stuifbergen perennials and bulbs. Our sales representatives are available to assist you with any inquiries or pricing information.

We look forward to doing business with you.

Kind regards,

Team Stuifbergen

Growing info Paeonia

Soil Type

Research indicates that nursery mixes, such as a composition of 60% hydro fiber and 40% peat, or commercially formulated peat-based substrates supplemented with composted pine bark at a 1:1 ratio by volume, demonstrate efficacy. The recommended pH range is between 5.5 to 7.0.

Planting Depth

The appropriate planting depth is crucial for paeonias. The upper eyes, from which the flower stems will emerge, should be positioned just below the soil surface, with no more than a 1/2 inch depth. Planting roots too deeply may result in leaf growth without flowering.

Irrigation

Following potting, it is imperative to irrigate the plants promptly to ensure proper contact between the crowns and the substrate. Paeonias should be irrigated overhead in the morning, with efforts made to avoid late-afternoon or evening watering sessions. The volume of water applied should be adjusted based on temperature and evaporation rates, ensuring that the substrate remains adequately moist throughout production. It is important to prevent waterlogged roots, particularly during the dormant winter period, as paeonias are more susceptible to root rots during this time. Thus, it is advisable to cultivate plants in well-drained locations, such as container pads, greenhouses, or cold frames.

Natural chilling/vernalization

Containerized paeonias can be exposed to outdoor conditions from potting until late January, typically spanning 2 to 3 months, to facilitate adequate natural chilling, with longer durations required for zones 7-8 compared to zones 3-6. During winter, pots should be shielded with frost blankets when temperatures drop below 20 °F for protection and uncovered during periods when temperatures rise above 40 °F. Rodenticide bait stations should be strategically placed among the plants before covering and refilled periodically throughout the winter.

Controlled chilling/vernalization

Alternatively, potted plants can undergo a chilling process outdoors for approximately one month or be placed in a 50 °F cooler for approximately 5 weeks for rooting, followed by relocation to a 40 °F cooler for a minimum of 3 weeks. If the rooting period is bypassed, potted plants should be maintained in a 40 °F cooler for at least 6 weeks.

Natural growing

To prevent excessive temperatures, it is advisable to maintain adequate ventilation in the cold frame towards the end of the season.

Controlled growing

If inducing growth in a heated greenhouse following sufficient chilling, plants can become market-ready within 6 to 8 weeks, exhibiting bud coloration. The greenhouse should maintain maximum day and minimum night temperatures within the range of 50-73 °F.

Overwintering

When overwintering a Peony, the same general rules to overwintering perennials apply. There are certain parts within the process that can be fine-tuned in order to make the Peony more comfortable however. Peonies can withstand cold quite well and are rated for USDA zone 3-8.

When overwintering Peonies, they are ideally kept inside in a hoop or poly house that has the ability to ventilate. When temperature spikes, the ability to ventilate prevents the eyes from developing before entering dormancy. If keeping the plants inside after transplanting isn't possible, they can be kept outside. Make sure to monitor weather developments. Cover the pots whenever cold snaps or extreme conditions are expected. Prevent the soil from freezing solid and make sure that the root doesn't detach from it, this will impact root growth.

Planting depth Paeonia

We want you to succeed with our bare root Peonies. Ensuring that you have the knowledge to grow excellent plants from the bare roots, we kindly remind you of one of the most important aspects: planting depth. The upper buds, from which the flower stems will emerge, should be positioned just below the soil surface, with no more than a half-inch depth. After watering, you may see the tips of the upper buds sticking above the soil level. Planting the roots too deep may lead to leaf growth without flowering.
